1. The passage given below is followed by a set of questions. Choose the most appropriate answer to each question.

The Bt technology, therefore, has little direct role in determining crop yield, except through the plant protection route. Crop output depends on the inherent yield potential of the cotton hybrid in which this gene has been incorporated. That apart, the current cotton glut in the country, thanks to a record cotton harvest of 33.4 million bales in 2010-11, does not bear testimony to any perceptible slowdown in output growth. But the chances of such a decline cannot be ruled out. There is a possibility that the existing Bt-cotton hybrids will run out of their useful life over a period which normally happens in the case of all hybrids and even non-genetically engineered varieties.

Besides, many illegal and unapproved seeds are in circulation. Their below-par performance does sully the image of Bt technology. Moreover, once one pest is suppressed effectively, as bollworm has owing to the prevalence of Bt hybrids, others tend to turn aggressive, necessitating newer, approaches to combat them. Therefore, there is a need to regularly replace existing Bt hybrids with better ones with higher innate yield potential and a capacity to withstand emerging threats. The onus lies on private seed companies, which virtually monopolize the cotton seed business, as well as the public sector farm research network. At present, most of the 35-odd companies marketing Bt seeds have licensing arrangements with technology developers, a handful of multinationals. Unfortunately, many companies with resources and the know-how to develop new gene-altered plant types are wary of investing in this cost-intensive pursuit. This is because of the cumbersome process of getting government approval for commercialization of their technology. Moreover, the unreasonable price caps placed by state governments on seeds have become a disincentive for investors, given the large overhead cost of technology development. These issues need to be addressed to facilitate a constant flow of investment into new technology development even with new Bt and other biotech hybrids or non-hybrid varieties. This will ensure that seeds are replaced at shorter intervals. Finally, public funding of research can play a constructive role in facilitating greater competition; ensuring that privately funded research is more forthcoming.

A. Why does the author present a case for regular replacement of Bt cotton hybrids with better ones?

A Their functional use is exhausted over time.

B Newer technology brings in better hybrids.

C Pests become aggressive and new varieties help tackle them.

D The hybrids get exhausted over time.

E None of these

Solution

The correct answer is option A i.e. Their functional use is exhausted over time.

In the first paragraph of the passage, it has been considered that “functionality of Bt cotton hybrids will be exhausted over time.” The author also expressed that when one pest is suppressed effectively by the hybrid, other pests become more aggressive. It is also necessary to bring out hybrids to combat these aggressive pests.

Therefore, it is clear that as their functional use is exhausted over time, so, the author present a case for regular replacement of Bt cotton hybrids with better ones.

Hence the chosen option is correct.

B. According to the passage, what is the main reason for the companies being wary of investing in developing better Bt cotton hybrids?

A

Unreasonable price caps are placed by state governments on genetically modified seeds.

B

Obtaining government approval for commercialization is cumbersome.

C

The existing BT hybrids need to be replaced with better ones on a regular basis.

D

There is a lack of public funding of research.

E

None of these

Solution

The correct answer is option B i.e. Obtaining government approval for commercialization is cumbersome.

By reading the passage we can conclude that the last paragraph talks about the reasons for why companies are wary of investing in developing better Bt cotton hybrids.

Options 'A' has been mentioned as an additional reason.

Only Option 'B' has been mentioned the main reason in the passage.

Option 'C' expresses the need and reason for technological improvements but fails to answer the issue at hand.

Option 'D' is a broad inference made on a solution and it cannot be inferred as a reason.

Therefore, it is clear that 'Obtaining government approval for commercialization is cumbersome' is the main reason for the companies being wary of investing in developing better Bt cotton hybrids.

Hence the chosen option is correct.

C. The given passage, as a part of a larger article, seeks to answer which of the following questions?

A Has Bt Cotton delivered on its promises?

B Is Bt cotton a good investment?

C Will Bt cotton run out of steam?

D Is enough being done for the development of Bt cotton?

E None of these

Solution

The correct answer is option C i.e. Will Bt cotton run out of steam?

By reading the first paragraph of the passage we can deduce that it talks about the fact that hybrids run out of their useful life.

By reading the second paragraph is about regularly replacing Bt hybrids with better ones.

The author also discusses that there are not many incentives for investors to pursue better and regular developments in Bt cotton hybrids.

The author concluded by discussing which issues related to lack of incentives could be pursued.

Therefore, it is clear that ‘Will Bt cotton run out of steam?’ is the apt. option.

Hence the chosen option is correct.
